As its name suggests, Issy was once an agricultural city, it was only at the beginning of the 20th century that crafts became more important. The growing village was also beginning to welcome working class populations. From now on, the city, its low-cost housing projects or its luxury buildings merge into the Parisian urban area. Today Issy-les-Moulinaux welcomes, near its old buildings, large companies (Coca Cola Europe headquarters), multimedia in glass buildings forming a real and modern business district only 30 minutes from Paris Centre by metro Line 12 or RER C.
